

Koli and Bosco "the Dog" Part 1

Once upon a time, in a faraway land called Wiggletown, lived an old woman named Koli and her most beloved pet, Bosco “the dog.” Koli was a short, skinny woman who loved to wear blue dresses and green hats. She had a beautiful smile and was always happy to spend all her time with Bosco “the dog.” Bosco “the dog” was a big, furry, brown, and black German shepherd who had a loud bark and loved to run around in the yard with the kids in Wiggletown and his favorite person, Koli.

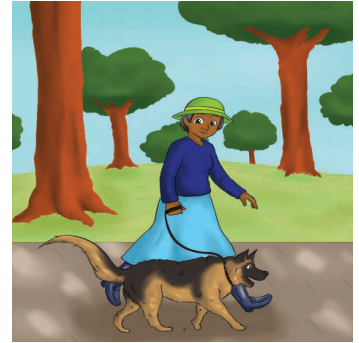

Koli and Bosco “the dog” lived in a house close to the woods where they spent their days walking through the green fields and enjoying afternoon teas with butter biscuits. They were always together, and Koli was always seen reading to Bosco “the dog” every evening before sundown.

Bosco “the dog” was the most treasured companion in the whole world to Koli, who will wake up every morning happy to see her beloved friend. Bosco “the dog” was always ready and eager to go out and play. He would wake Koli up in the morning with a cheerful bark and a wet lick on her face, which she gladly responded to with a smile that straightened her slightly crooked lips.

They went for walks, gazed at the chirping birds, and then returned to enjoy a hearty breakfast that Koli always prepared for two. Their favorite breakfast was pancakes and fried eggs, which they washed down with a big cup of apple juice. After breakfast, Bosco “the dog” would be seen helping Koli with her chores as she cleaned their house, watered the plants, and made their lunch. They would take a nap together and awake to enjoy lunch together. They typically had fried plantains with rice and stew for lunch.

Afterward, Koli would be seen reading on her porch with Bosco “the dog” curled at her feet and both of them enjoying each other’s company. Around midafternoon, Koli made them both some tea with biscuits and continued reading on her porch with Bosco “the dog.” Koli would pet her dog happily, while they watched the sun set after a fun-filled day.

A few hours later, she would take Bosco for another walk before returning to make them dinner. It was usually some chicken soup and yams. They enjoyed their dinner at the table together and watched some television until bedtime, when Bosco “the dog” would snuggle at the foot of the bed after licking Koli on the face to wish her good night.

This was the lifestyle of Koli and Bosco “the dog” until one day when this pair were bound to be thrown into a world of adventure they would remember for the rest of their lives.
